

Producers Bio

Kathryn Lennon has been a radio journalist with Terra Informa since October 2011. She got her start in environmental journalism at the University of Waterloo, while doing a degree in Environment and Resource studies, and writing and editing for Alternatives Journal. Chris Chang-Yen Phillips has been working with Terra Informa since October 2011. He is a recent graduate of Trent University, and has written and produced for CBC Radio and Vue Weekly.

Program Note

Terra Informa strives to be a source for local and international environmental news with a Canadian perspective. Based out of the CJSR News Department in Edmonton, Alberta, and syndicated on radio stations nationally, we strive to create awareness of the under-reported connections between our lives, the environment and our communities. Every week we produce a show comprised of an environmental news overview and feature reports, along with local campaigns wrap ups, science “shorts”, movie reviews and environmental terminology definitions. Terra Informa has also begun practising investigate reporting and documentary making putting it at the fore front of breaking issues and independent radio journalism in Canada. Shows regularly feature interviews with politicians, activists, high profile thinkers and community organizers to highlight local, national and international environmental issues. Terra Informa has been running since 2003.

In this particular submission you are hearing how Terra Informa presents its weekly news headlines. As a nationally syndicated program it is a core value of our program to represent all the regions of Canada in every news overview in a accessible, positive manner. This it to raise awareness, promote engagement and encourage thinking on environmental issues while trying to avoid the effects the media can have on apathy.